Patrick Meunier, Anémone épinglée, 2017, 12 cm x 15 (diam.), aiguilles laiton, résine, pigment, vernis céramique, photo Brigit Bosch

For several years now, a major part of Patrick Meunier's pictorial research, when he is not busy with his activities as a publisher and creator of artist's books, is being re-invented in a large number of series, complex and abundant dialogues between fragments of works, iconic references gleaned from art history, and the history of architecture and design (which have marked his life as an artist and architect), and figures, small volumes in which pop(ular) culture, poetry and celebration have found a place.

Small families of eclectic sculptures which are assembled and scattered in their balance, their postures, and their acrobatics as combinatory and random episodes, to tell micro-stories. There is ingeniousness in these poetic assemblages, these unlikely encounters between objects, materials and colours. Design also has a role in this invention of poetic language. Stands, brackets and shelves all stem from the same creative principle as the pieces and accommodate them in a landscape of fantastic retrieval.

This series of sculptures and design objects being shown for the first time in Ici-même / Imagine... incarnates all the freedom and creativity which hallmark this resolutely contemporary artist, who is endlessly renewing his vocabulary as he encounters people, techniques and materials.
